

ACS 10 Symposium: DISPLACEMENT AND ARCHITECTURE

The theme of displacement has drawn increasing attention in recent years from architects, historians, theologians, designers, urban planners, and artists seeking to meet the now growing range of challenges related to human settlement. These challenges especially include the tangible impacts of climate change, sea level rise, refugee communities, and the economic-political displacement of masses of peoples across the globe. In addition they also include the more intangible and accompanying challenges of psychological and spiritual displacement. The symposium will focus on displacement and design mitigation strategies addressing our inner sense of spiritual and cultural permanence within the temporal realities that we now occupy and will occupy into the future.
